RDS appoints new Business Development Manager

RDS Technology, a leading manufacturer of electronic measuring, monitoring & control systems for off road vehicles, today announced the appointment of Mark Evans (pictured right/left?) to the position of Business Development Manager. With an extensive background in UK and international markets, Mark will be an asset as the company continues its growth.

In his new role, Evans will support existing as well as appointing new distributors in strategic territories around the world and will also be involved in distributor account management and development initiatives.

“The popularity of RDS’s rugged electronic instruments fitted to off road vehicles within the agricultural engineering and industrial construction sectors continues to grow worldwide, and the addition of Mark Evans to our knowledgeable team will ensure we are well-positioned to capitalise on the demand,” said Richard Danby, Managing Director. “Mark’s 17 years experience and proven track record in technically led roles in both the UK and overseas will help us provide the right solutions for our growing list of partners and customers.

Prior to joining RDS, Evans held positions in sales and marketing, including negotiating and completing new business proposals for on-site mobile communication systems and buried plant test and measurement instrumentation.
